General Thomas's Annual Report.

THE REBEL SPIRIT UNTAMED.

Outrages in Kentucky and Tennessee

An Interesting Statement of Affairs.

Report of Inspector General Shriver

Condition of Affairs at West Point.

Special Dispatch to the Commercial.

WASHINGTON, November 17, 1868.

Confirmed and Rejected.

Among the nominations of Internal Revenue Collectors sent in, was Hon. Isaac Sharp, of Illinois, and among those rejected was J. W. Compton, for Indiana.

Gen. James S. Ekin

Has been assigned to duty as Acting Quartermaster General of the Army, during the temporary absence of Gen. Meigs.

The Department of the Cumberland.

Gen. George H. Thomas has made his annual report to Gen. Grant, congratulating on the improvement of the Cumberland. In speaking with the disposition of the troops and an account of the southern battle-field, Gen. Thomas of West Virginia in preventing Senator of Phillips, and the condition of the country, the Department has greatly improved in its condition where there are no troops stationed. The local authorities should be allowed at all military posts. The force of the troops are much the same as last year. The state of affairs, regarding the officers and the security of life, has not at all improved, or in some cases is much worse. The civil courts are in no case and mutual prosecutions are frequent. The Freedmen's Bureau is doing much good, and should be continued for the present. The Reconstruction acts are necessary for the protection of the loyal citizens. The difficulties which exist in Kentucky and Tennessee are not of a political character, but are the result of personal feuds, kept up by combinations of men to obtain control of the offices. The civil courts should be encouraged to punish offenders, and the military should not be withdrawn from the States.

General Grant, Brevet General Grant, John Russell, Young and several Indian Chiefs are in Washington assembling matters, after which they will return to their homes. The following is the programme of his movements:

Leaving Washington on the 17th inst., he will proceed to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and from there to Fort Harker, Kansas, on the 20th, where he will meet the Indian Commissioners, and will be joined by Generals Sherman and Sheridan. From there he will proceed to Fort Dodge, Kansas, and from there to Fort Hays, Kansas

The Daily Commercial.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1868.

A Democratic election board in Tyrone township, Centre county, Pa., on November 3d, counted the vote of a negro, his ballot being for Seymour and Blair. Fancy the White Man's party.

It is suggested that the Republicans can confirm its nominate a candidate for the office of Pennsylvania should assemble early in 1869. It is said that agitation and discussion are what most ramp the Democratic party, and that an early nomination will create the Republican party to strengthen its organization.

Executive officers and others in general will find some useful information embodied in the charge of Judge Sculmaker, in the case of Franklin Street, reported in to-day's issue. Some points are therein made clear which have been up imperfectly understood, and the charge of the Judge should be widely read.

And the time has come when every sensible person intelligent enough to make them ask regardless of the high privilege that contemporary shows clearly that in the State of New York, case to the party of fraud and brutality. Nowhere more intelligent man to-day that the greatest enemy the Republic has is an unintelligent suffrage, directed by demagogues. Look to laws in native suffrage—but let it be intelligent.

The Indiana Democracy are at loggerheads. The moderate Democracy under Hendricks's lead, are determined to purge open war from the extreme wing of the party under the lead of Lazo Douglas, the staunch supporter of the "Young Eagle of the West." It will be remembered that Douglas was ignored from the Chairmanship of the Democratic State Central Committee of Indiana, about the time the October elections. It was understood at the time that this change was effected by Senator Hendricks, who had reason to mistrust Douglas.

Through the influence of Hendricks, Hon. Joseph E. McDonald was placed in the chair vacated by Douglas. The latter naturally felt chagrined at this action, and has but did all that he could to defeat the Senator. The Hendricks wing now proclaim their intention to drive the extreme Democrats out of the party. They have received the feeling that prevailed so strongly against the State of Liberty convention of 1867, thus damaging Democratic candidates of his aldermanic office belonged to the organization. They declare their intention to frame a platform at their next State Convention, which meets on the 4th of January next, similar to that contemplated in New York in case Chase failed to extract the nomination. The contest has assumed large proportions, and cannot fail to result in the complete overthrow of "Young Greenbacks" in Indiana.

COUNTRY ROADS.

Some days ago we referred to the importance of maintaining good roads, as a means of inviting population into the rural districts, enhancing the value of property, and building up and developing sections of the country which are now comparatively unknown to the great mass of our citizens. There are many other reasons why good roads should be insisted on. It is a fact well known that the condition of the roads leading into this city has a very important bearing upon the prices of many commodities, especially farm products. When the roads are "good," our markets are usually well supplied with all kinds of produce, which always commands a ready sale. When the season for "bad" roads sets in, the supplies are cut off in a great measure, and exorbitant prices are demanded from consumers. Then come in the "in different" condition, when roads are neither good nor bad, but when travel is more or less disturbed. Farmers, gardeners, hucksters, and others, can form but an imperfect estimate of the loss which they annually sustain from this cause. It is enormous, while the aggregate loss is beyond calculation. The time for bad roads is anticipated with as much certainty as the holidays, and thousands of producers are compelled to force their commodities upon the market at a time when the demand is limited and prices depressed. When the demand is brisk and prices most remunerative, they are unable to transport anything to market. Then it is that products from distant points are thrown in lots up railroad and river, until the market is supplied, and, when the roads become passable again, the demand has ceased and prices have assumed a normal condition. If the roads were good—a possible condition for many at all times—there would be mutual advantages realized by both producers and consumers. The supply would be more uniform, prices more regular, and the foreign produce would have to be sold in large parcels at the expense of those dealing in our immediate vicinity, but who are kept from market by the mud embargo. The losses incurred in this way would hardly compensate for the expense of keeping our principal avenues of travel in good repair all the year round. In view of the benefits to be reaped by the great mass of consumers, the City Councils would be justified in making the most liberal outlays for roads in the newly consolidated districts, because our markets are largely supplied from the farms and dairies lying "between the rivers," the products from which must be brought over the wagon roads entering here. Good roads are as essential to the prosperity of the country the cities as good streets are to that of our cities. Our streets are kept always passable, at whatever cost, while our roads are everywhere neglected. Road taxes are grudgingly paid, and that Supervisor who makes the best exactions is the most popular man in the township. The custom of allowing men to "work out" their road taxes is a bad one, as is also the allotment of certain sections of road to certain wealthy men, to be kept in order in lieu of taxes. The whole system is badly in need of revision, and the man who devises a more perfect plan for making and repairing our highways, and a more equitable method of assessing the cost upon the people benefited, will be remembered as a public benefactor. There are those who strenuously resisted and still resist street improvements, and who never would pay a dollar of paving assessment unless compelled by law to do so. So there are farmers who are opposed to paying sufficient taxes to keep their roads in passable condition, and who, strangely enough, submit unmurmuringly to losses, incurred through this very neglect, amounting to three times the sum necessary to make the roads good. A law might be framed similar to the paving law of our cities, by which those who persistently stand in the way of these great public improvements might be compelled to pay and bear their full share of the expense. We would rather have these improvements made economically, but if compulsory legislation is unnecessary, we are in favor of that. We should never have had a railroad into Pittsburgh if the unanimous consent of our farmers and lot owners had been requisite to that end, and the same "ruin" which has been wrought by railway companies, as affecting the prices of real estate, would follow in kind, if not in degree, by opening and maintaining new roads, and keeping the old ones in perfect condition throughout the entire year.

"Sunshine and Shadow in New York."

The new publication by Matthew Hale Smith, "Burleigh" is now being sold by subscription, and will find its way into the hands of everybody who takes any interest in the rise of the great city. The work comprises ninety-two elaborately engraved views and notable places and things of New York, with a dozen illustrations. The sketches are written in a lucid style, and graphically portray the bright and the dark side of metropolitan life in the great emporium. The personal sketches are very realistic. They are not of a fulsome character, on the contrary, some are not very complimentary, but still, very interesting. High and low, in all their varied phases, are represented without any attempt at favoritism, and together the sketches are very interesting, and the book handsomely gotten up. Mr. E. Clark is the agent for Pittsburgh, from whom copies may be had.

A Tennessee farmer, one of a party who recently killed thirty-one deer in two days, brought down a buck and doe with an arrow, which he shot from his horse, when the animals, with a number of others, were crossing a river. The arrow passed entirely through the body of the buck and was not found, but the doe fell in the water

FINANCE AND TRADE.

THURSDAY EVENING, November 17, 1868.

There was a pretty brisk demand for loans to-day, but most of the offerings were of such unwilling to extend their loans, and consequently a good deal of moderately strong paper was thrown on the open market. Rates for loans are high, and all paper is only advantageously.

The New York stock and bond market continued considerable excitement to-day, and closed at a decline of more than one per cent., below yesterday's quotations. Money has been pretty easy, but stocks are not wanted. The market is constantly unsettled by heavy fluctuations of gold—the bulk and ups of the late depression in prices.

The following figures, taken from the quotations on the board at A. Kennedy's Stock Rooms, Apollo Building, No. 84 Fourth avenue, show the prices of Railway stocks, gold, etc., at the various sessions of the New York Boards during the past week:
